AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION

Brunner, E. S. FARMERS OF THE WORLD; THE DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION.
N.Y., Columbia univ. pres, 1945. 280 p. 275.2 B83

"The primary aim of this book is to make available to those doing extension work among rural people the body of information already gained by specialists with such experience. The authors, all of whom are experts, have followed a central point of view, the similarity of the problems encountered around the world, and the importance of observing certain basic guide posts of principles. They have based their discussions on the premise that the end of all extension activity is the growth and improvement of the individual and his community rather than the fashioning of automatons who merely obey orders handed down from above, and in the application of the principles, have taken into account the differences in cultural backgrounds.

"With war-torn countries eagerly awaiting the time when they can start the rehabilitation of their rural areas, this book is particularly important, mobilizing as it does the findings of science in this field and showing the way to present them to farm people with sympathetic interpretation and assistance in its application."

Brown, Paul. THE HORSE; HIS GAITS, POINTS AND CONFORMATION. N.Y., Scribner, 1943. 64 p. 42 B81

"This book is a simple, direct explanation of the movements and points of the horse and it is designed to answer many of the questions which arise in the minds of horse lovers, young and old alike. For instance, how far does a good horse stride at a gallop? How far and high can he jump? What is the stride of a trotter? Or, what is a hand and where is a horse measured? All these questions and many more are answered by numerous drawings and a minimum of text."--Book jacket.
